Abstract

The Training Interdisciplinary Educational Scientists (TIES) Summer Institute will be held on May 7 and 8, 2018 in 127 Moore Building. The Summer Institute will focus on educational research across three panels (Supporting Early Learning, Promoting Adolescent Resilience, and Engaging High-Risk Parents). Drs. Christina Weiland (University of Michigan), Brenda Jones Harden (University of Maryland), and Diane Hughes (New York University) and several Penn State faculty members will engage in panel discussions describing their research and experiences related to educational engagement. The Summer Institute is designed to focus on research interests of graduate students and faculty within Child-Clinical Psychology, Developmental Psychology, School Psychology, Educational Psychology, Special Education, and Health and Human Development.
